

By E. F. SPENCE.

A moment later Mrs. Chambers gave a cry. Ernest—her Ernest—was talking to the sales, or rather, to the woman in them, and she was smirking at him impudently: Ernest, whom she believed to be in the office working at wonderful plans for a dock on a difficult coast.

"373," she said, drowsily, and then she bundled together the sable coat as though it were the vilest "Japanese" and stuffed it into a pigeon-hole, at which Mrs. Wallace gave a gasp and then a sigh of happiness at the thought that its very quality would save it from injury. The woman in the black domino
